

The Fetch Lifecycle

Two promises, not one: the first gives you the response, the second gives you the body.

None of this blocks the page. fetch hands the work to the browser, your function suspends at the await, and the callback comes back as a MICROTASK once the response is ready: the same event-loop rule as every other promise.